“ I am so sorry Lori. I enjoyed taking care of your mom. We always had a good time, she never wanted me to leave. Whenever I took care of her on the weekends I always took her for a ride and we would go get ice cream. She always gave me a hug and always told me to drive carefully. I always gave her a hug back and told her I would see her later. I loved to see her smile. She especially loved it at night when I tucked her in, and I would tell her to sleep tight, she always argued that she did not want to. If she had trouble sleeping she always asked me to stay up and talk to her till she was ready to go to sleep. I made it easy to get her to go to sleep she was not allowed to take a nap the days I watched her, or I was going to get her back by reading the most boring book to her she was not ready for that so she always stay awake for me. Their were time she said she was going to race me on her walker, what she did not know was I let her win to make her think she was queen for the day. To me she was always a queen she always made you fill loved even when you had a bad day.

“ The first to have touched my heart and the one I will never forget as long as I live...I will miss your sweet smile, the little kisses on the cheek you gave me, and our fun times laughing and looking at cute boys on the Hallmark channel. I will miss trying to make you smile on your bad days and holding you while you cried. I will miss dancing with you on your good days and looking at the pictures of your babies with you. I will miss you for the rest of my life. You've taught me lessons I never knew I needed to learn. You've showed me that even in times of pain, confusion, and anger, there is still time for a smile and a squeeze of a hand. I don't know where you went, but I know you're dancing to good music and you look as beautiful as ever. Rest sweetly my dear Miss Pat. I hope to dance with you again some day
